3. Treaties. Treaties (sometimes called agreements, conventions, exchanges of notes or protocols) between States " or sometimes between States and international organizations " are the other main source of law. Strictly speaking a treaty is not a source of law so much as a source of obligation under law.

The social function of international law is the same as that of other forms of law. It is a mode of the self-constituting of a society, namely the international society of the whole human race, the society of all societies. Law is a system of legal relations which condition social action to serve the common interest.

Of all legal subjects, international law is at once the most richly varied and arguably the least understood, even by lawyers. For the past two decades it has been the focus of intense analysis by legal philosophers, international relations specialists, linguists, professional lawyers, historians, economists, and political scientists, as well as those who study, teach, and practice the discipline.
